

From Our Readers ▶ Letters to the Editor

Health information will remain private

Published: August 18 2010, 12:00 AM

A recent article announced the first independent radiology practice in the region to participate in HEALTHeLINK, the Western New York clinical information exchange.

An important point to reinforce is the stringent security and privacy measures in place to keep patient health information safe and secure. Patient health information such as lab and radiology reports can only be accessed by physicians and approved medical staffs directly involved in the patients' care.

HEALTHeLINK continues to update its security and privacy measures with the latest technology, including encryption and password authentication to ensure that patient health records are only being viewed by those authorized by patient consent to review this information.

Daniel E. Porreca

Executive Director HEALTHeLINK